INTRODUCTION

2017 marked the 4th full year that NAPD has been in existence. There were big milestones; there were small – but meaningful - connections. NAPD picked up another 20 organizational members, swelled to nearly 16,000 members, set a record for webinars offered, added a live Workloads Conference to its annual Executive Leadership Institute, launched a Mentors Program, grew its committees and their activities, lent its support to dozens of jurisdictions in a variety of ways, and continued to foster a national community of public defenders and public defense professionals.

An investigator in Montana got help from an investigator in Florida via the NAPD-investigators list serv. A social worker in Knoxville shared her comprehensive academic review of every single social worker program with NAPD's MyGideon library. In the middle of the night, a line defender in Ketchikan, Alaska found a webinar to help his preparation for trial in the webinar archive. Leaders got shout-outs for advancing reform. A group of communicators began to plan a conference for their unique professional niche. There were robust discussions on the merits of risk assessments. Trainers talked about effectively confronting implicit bias in their offices. More than 100 people blogged for NAPD, writing about their various experiences as defenders, the impact of court rulings, mainstream media's treatment of high profile crimes, achievements, or troubling trends. Increasingly, the media and social science researchers called NAPD for the defender perspective in justice issues.

It all adds up to progress.

On the anniversary of the Gideon decision in 2017, NAPD released its Foundational Principles. This thoughtful effort described the values that NAPD holds and provides focus to our mission. Members put these principles into action every day of the year.

Throughout 2017, NAPD again insisted that public defenders are the experts on public defense issues, and essential participants in a fair and efficient justice system. NAPD resisted strategies used to undermine strong public defense programs and harm our clients, and by extension, communities particularly communities of color. Finally, NAPD persisted in its efforts to obtain more defender resources, to enjoy the freedom to be zealous advocates, to advance data driven policies, to engage our clients and the client community in the justice movement, and to share the best of what others have done for improvements across the country.

WORKLOADS

NAPD continues to focus the tremendous energy around public defender workloads advocacy. In March, the Workload Committee also released a second position paper, Statement on Reducing Demand For Public Defense: Alternatives to Traditional Prosecution Can Reduce Defender Workload, Save Money, and Reduce Recidivism. This supplements its 2015 position statement, Workloads Position Paper, which called for mandatory permanent timekeeping as an essential component to controlling workloads.

NAPD continues to focus the tremendous energy around public defender workloads advocacy. In March, the Workload Committee also released a second position paper, Statement on Reducing Demand For Public Defense: Alternatives to Traditional Prosecution Can Reduce Defender Workload, Save Money, and Reduce Recidivism. This supplements its 2015 position statement. Workloads Position Paper, which called for mandatory permanent timekeeping as an essential component to controlling workloads.

In April, 60 Minutes aired a full segment on the plight of Louisiana's workloads crisis. This compelling piece interviewed NAPD Vice-Chair Derwyn Bunton, NAPD General Counsel Stephen Hanlon, NAPD member and Tulane Law Professor Pam Metzger, and staff at the Orleans Public Defenders, and demonstrated how excessive workloads obstruct the ability to achieve justice, causing irreparable harm to poor people, and the lawyers who strive to serve them without the tools to seek the truth.

The NAPD Workload Committee grew by a number of members in 2017 and now represents virtually every state involved in workload counting and analysis, including Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Missouri, Tennessee, Louisiana, Rhode Island, Michigan, Florida, Minnesota, New York, Indiana and Washington.

In November, more than 80 leaders attended the NAPD Workloads Conference at St. Louis School of Law in St. Louis, University, This conference brought together the diversity of workloads research from advocates across the nation in various states of analysis, policy reform and litigation. By all accounts, it was a tremendous success - both for the opportunity for robust information exchange and the chance to create and strengthen supportive networks among leaders battling a collective challenge that is pervasive to almost every public defense program in the country.

Finally, NAPD through its General Counsel and the administration of grant funds, is involved in four ongoing Workloads Studies.
Steve Hanlon is Project Director in workload studies ongoing in Louisiana, Colorado, Missouri and Rhode Island.

The Workloads Committee is chaired by Mark Stephens (District Defender, Knox County Public Defenders Community Law Office) and Stephen Hanlon (NAPD General Counsel).

The NAPD, and in particular the Workload Committee, has changed the way we in in New Mexico have conceived of the issue of effectiveness of counsel, and how we advocate for greater resources. The exchange of ideas, and the guidance and encouragement from the group, has made possible progress that I couldn't have imagined two years ago.

Ren Raur

Chief Public Defender, Law Offices of the New Mexico Public Defender

Ending excessive workloads was the primary organizing principle that drove the formation of the NAPD. Early on, we committed ourselves to develop a critical mass of reliable data and analytics to establish reasonable workload limits. Almost five years later, we are well on our way to accomplishing this important goal.

Stephen Hanlon NAPD General Counsel

AMICUS

The NAPD Amicus Committee continued to offer positions on justice issues across the country, in jurisdictions ranging from local, state, and federal courts to the United States Supreme Court. A volunteer committee of public defenders and law professors with backgrounds in public defense reviewed dozens of requests and submitted 21 briefs in 2017, with many of those briefs comprising research and drafting by committee co-chairs, members, and University of Cincinnati NAPD student chapter members. The Committee is grateful for the outstanding work of pro bono counsel who have helped NAPD represent, the unique perspective of public defenders providing the right to counsel to indigent clients.

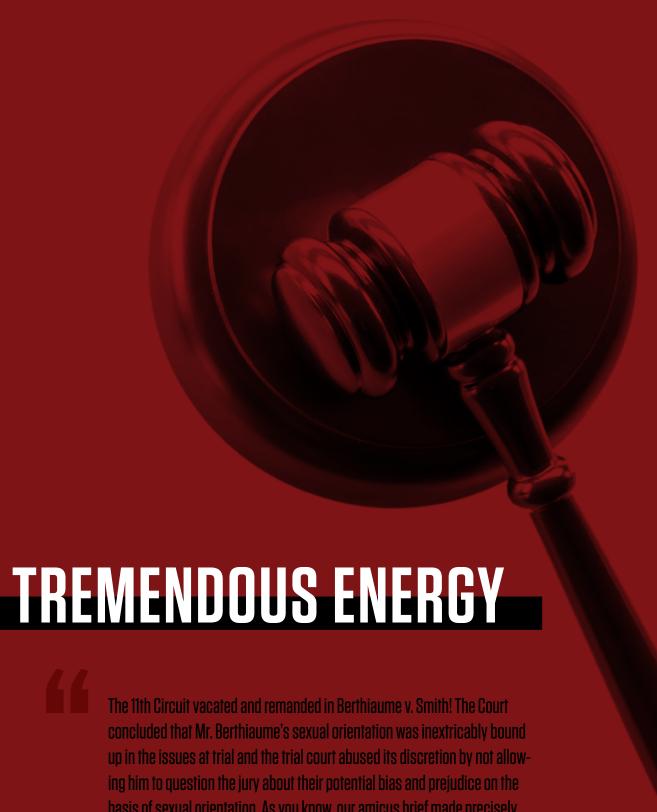

2L. University of Cincinnati Law School/NAPD Bearcat Chapter:

"In McWilliams v. Dunn, the Supreme Court cited the NAPD's amicus brief in the majority opinion (McWilliams v. Dunn, 137 S. Ct. 1790, 1800 (2017)). It is hard to overstate the excitement that I felt seeing the highest court in the land mention my research. Never in my wildest dreams could I imagine being a part of a Supreme Court decision! As a law student, the opportunity to substantively contribute to the development of law is rare. To have your research cited by the Supreme Court is an accomplishment that defies words. But beyond the excitement and thrill of seeing your work cited, the experience served as a reminder that even a group of passionate and motivate law students can make meaningful contributions to the development of indigent defense law. Working with my law school colleagues on the case, it was comforting to know that the next generation of young lawyers is committed to protecting the rights of indigent defendants. and I am thrilled to be a part of it. NAPD has given me an opportunity that few other students have, and one of the crowning jewels of my young career."

Lester Finkle Chief of Staff. Law Office of the Cook County:

"It is the obligation of lawyers working together in a law office or law firm to avoid conflicts of interest. Illinois courts, however, have never applied the conflicts of interest rules to public defender offices. When the Public Defender of Cook County challenged this difference in the application of the rules of professional conduct, which govern the ethical behavior of all lawyers, NAPD stood by her side. In our appeal to the Illinois Supreme Court, NAPD acted without hesitation in filing an amicus brief that argued that those who are indigent have the same right to conflict-free counsel as those who have money. The appeal is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, where we know that NAPD will continue to support us and continue to fight for respect for all public defenders."

The Amicus Committee is chaired by H. Louis Sirkin (Of Counsel, Santen & Hughes) and Janet Moore (Professor. University of Cincinnati Law School).

basis of sexual orientation. As you know, our amicus brief made precisely this argument. Thank you again to NAPD for joining the brief! This decision will help ensure jury fairness for LGBT people!

EDUCATION

NAPD had a banner year or training. It held 42 webinars for its members, bringing the total number of webinars in the NAPD Webinar Archive to over 150. These webinars are offered live with O&A and then archived in video with materials for defenders to watch as their schedules allow.

Faculty is consistently the best in the nation in their areas of expertise, and follow up between faculty and attendees is not uncommon. Many defender offices use these webinars to supplement or provide the foundation to their training programs. The Webinar Archive also contains taped recordings of all plenaries for NAPD's live trainings, and hundreds of hours of trainings shared by other organizational members.

The Death Penalty Subcommittee continued its work in 2017, creating significant litigation and mitigation resources for the benefit of all members of the defense team. This group published a number of blog posts, created dozens of resources for MyGideon, delivered webinars to capital defenders and advocates, and nurtured the capital community to increased communication and collaboration.

In 2017, a group of investigator members within NAPD self-organized to push for live, NAPD-sponsored investigator training. Right on their heels a similar effort originated for social workers. NAPD will host both of these live trainings for more than 200 investigators and social workers in Denver, CO in March 2018.

The Education Committee is chaired by Ed Monahan (former Kentucky Public Advocate) and Bob Hill (Chief Public Defender, Marion County Public Defender's Office) is Vice-Chair.

was a lot of fun! Don't let the idea of a webinar daunt you. Jeff sets up a "rehearsal" in advance so you can practice. And for the real deal, he is on the other end working the system. If you enjoy helping our colleagues around the country be better advocates, sign up to teach a webinar!

As a Managing Attorney, I regularly remind the attorneys and staff under my supervision of the value these training videos provide and the ease of obtaining them right at your fingertips at your own personal convenience. We have, in fact, viewed several of the videos during our regular staff meetings. It's always good to see Public Defenders from Minnesota presenting. In particular, Mary Moriarty's webinar entitled 'Talking to Jurors about Race' was excellent!

SYSTEMS BUILDERS

The Systems Builders Committee works to strengthen the quality of public defense delivery systems throughout the country. The Systems Builders Committee is comprised of current and retired defender leaders, public defender board and/or commission members, and system advocates representing a range of experiences and perspectives on public defense issues.

During 2017, Systems Builders provided informal technical assistance in a number of jurisdictions facing diverse issues and released its formal recommendations for the Regional Public Defender for Capital Cases, which serves the vast majority of Texas' rural counties.

It also weighed in on interference in the selection of public defender leadership from Atlanta, Georgia's Municipal Court to Humboldt County, California. In response to these persistent issues, the Committee published two position papers: "Qualifications of those Selecting Public Defense Leadership" and "Qualifications of those Serving as Public Defense Leadership". These resources provide best-practice, practical advice to systems undergoing leadership change.

In order to strengthen the quality of public defense delivery systems, Systems Builders established a Mentors Program for Executive and Manager Leadership, available to any new or veteran public defense leader who seeks a mentor to address professional and personal challenges in creating or enhancing a client-centered best practice public defense program.

Dean Beer, Chief Public Defender Montgomery County Public Defender's Office (PA):

"Using NAPD's Systems Builders

Committee was huge success. As our office transitions from a traditional public defender's office into a more holistic client centered office, not only has the philosophy of the office changed but personnel have changed too. Change is difficult and especially in governmental offices people don't want to change. By having Systems Builders come in, we had people with phenomenal experience look independently how our office runs internally and how it functions within the county system. Not only did they identify problems we did not see, they came up with solutions that we did not think of. They did so with the years of experience to know what should and could be done. One of the scariest things is bringing in outside evaluators. The people that NAPD sent were not only knowledgeable but understanding of the people who work in this office. To a person, everyone felt they were treated with the utmost respect. As a leader I received honest, knowledgeable feedback from great and experienced leaders. Additionally, I knew that the evaluators sent were true Public Defenders, who put the client's needs front and center. I am not sure where else you can find people like that in any other organization. The report provided great ideas we could implement on our own and those that would need buy-in from other county agencies. It was a roadmap of where we needed to go. Since that report was done we've been able to make some of the changes that were recommended. Additionally, we've used the report with other outside groups that are helping us move the office forward. This was an invaluable experience and one that I would recommend for any public defender's office that is going through either a cultural change or a staff change of significance."

The Systems Builders
Committee is chaired by Bill
Ward (State Public Defender,
Minnesota Board of Public Defense).

BJS GRANT

Through 2018, NAPD continued to work on the development of the nation's first ever national survey of public defenders. This data project – funded by the Bureau of Justice Statistics (at the United States Department of Justice), is undertaken with its exceptional project partners the Urban Institute and the Indigent Defense Research Association.

To ensure that this survey remains a defender-driven research project, NAPD took the lead on identifying 10 defenders across the country – representing diverse system types, case specialization and personal demographics. Our expert panel also includes the 'defender-embedded researchers' from the New York Office of Indigent Legal Services, Michigan Indigent Defense Commission, Louisiana Public Defender Board,

North Carolina Office of Indigent Defense Services and Travis County (TX) Criminal Courts, as well as feedback from numerous members of the client community, obtained through the participatory defense hubs supported by Silicon Valley De-Bug.

NAPD and its project partners are thrilled to be concluding this project and presenting to BJS a truly defender driven survey instrument, much enhanced information about system types throughout all of the country's courts of criminal jurisdiction, and a series of recommendations to improve public defender participation and accuracy for a greater portfolio of public defense data.

I have spent time this past year with Humboldt County, California and Sioux Falls, South Dakota. I have travelled and given time to public defenders in Ohio, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, I have taken calls and offered assistance to Marquette, Michigan and Denver, Colorado, which was accepted. It remains my honor to help out.

NAPD's achievements in 2017 are the result of the hard work of its members, who join our ranks and find time to advance our common cause in small pockets of time outside of work, or by choosing to apply NAPD's sharing model to their projects by reaching out and collaborating with a greater segment of the public defender community.

We thank the many pro bono law firms that make our significant amicus work possible. By being partners with NAPD, new relationships and cross-disciplinary learning advance the work of lawyers across diverse areas of expertise, and bring some of the finest minds in the law working outside of public defense to bear on the issues that are most critical to protecting and advancing the rights of poor people accused of crime. This is a significant investment of time and resources, given for free in the interest of justice. We appreciate it very much.

Our work was supported this year with grants from the John and Laura Arnold Foundation, The Advocacy Fund, and the Bureau of Justice Statistics. We thank them.

We also received a number of financial donations – some big, some small. In particular, the contributions of Roderick Lee and Katherine Mason, and one from a member-donor requesting to remain anonymous were particularly generous. Each donation advances our mission and is a moving testament to the value our colleagues see in the vision and deliverables of NAPD.

Finally, we thank our many partners across the spectrum who work on an enormous scope of projects. The National Juvenile Defender Center, American Bar Association, Equitas Project, Indigent Defense Research Association, Sixth Amendment Center, and the PreTrial Justice Institute form an incomplete list.

We're stronger together, no doubt, and appreciate all the help. We insist, we resist, and we persist, in gratitude.
